

The adaptation of the rabbit

The most obvious adaptation a rabbit has is its ability to reproduce at a very rapid rate.

They eat a wide variety of vegetation.

They live in burrows, where predators can't reach them.

There are different colours of rabbits and in the wilderness, their furs are a camouflage and enables them to hide from predators.

Rabbits have long ears that enable them to hear well.

Their powerful hind legs enable them to leap quickly away from predators.

